Counselor Newsletter

Spring is in sight!

Dear students and parents,

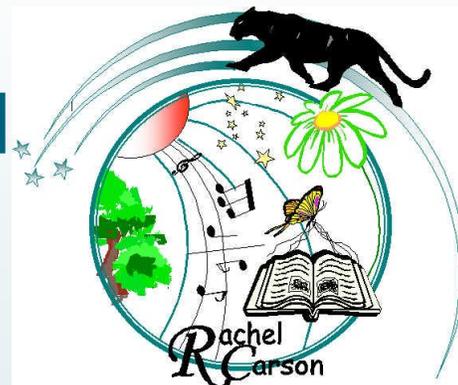

Happy New Year! We have made it halfway through the school year! We are officially in the second semester, which is the start of the third quarter. Since we returned from winter break, students have had academic advising lessons with the counselors to select their courses for next school year. We will continue academic advising during the month of February, so students should be reading all the updated Google Classroom announcements from their counselors and emailing their counselors if they have any questions or concerns on their courses for next year.

By now students should have received their updated schedules for second semester, which is typically a change in their semester elective course. We hope that students will enjoy their selected second semester electives.

Please note: We cannot make any changes to second semester electives unless there is an error.

Looking ahead to spring

Counselors will be presenting lessons on Social Emotional Learning topics and will also continue to offer lunch bunches to all students on Mondays (11:30 a.m.-12:15 p.m.). Lunch bunches are first come, first served, so students should sign up on their counselor's Google Classroom page via a SignUp Genius link.

Did you know?

February 1-5 is National School Counseling Week. This year's theme is "School Counselors: All In for All Students," and the week highlights the impact school counselors can have in helping students achieve school success and plan for a career.

Resources

We encourage all students to please continue to check their Carson Student Central Page (an icon on all the FCPS student laptops) for extra resources on a variety of items. These include resources on mental and emotional support, as well as all the required information for the rising ninth-grade course selections.
